DESCRIPTION OF THE WORK DONE IN BRIEF

During the second week of the internship, I focused on learning the Java Collection Framework by studying its core concepts, structure, and practical applications. I explored the basics of collections and understood their importance in handling groups of objects efficiently. I studied the List interface in detail using ArrayList ,LinkedList the Set interface using HashSet ,TreeSet, and the Map interface using HashMap, along with their internal working, constructors, and commonly used methods.

Additionally, I learned different ways to iterate through collections using iterators, enhanced for-loops, and map traversal techniques. I also studied generic collections to ensure type safety and improve code reusability. As part of hands-on practice, I implemented various types of collections and performed operations such as insertion, deletion, searching, and sorting of data. This week strengthened my understanding of data structures in Java and enhanced my ability to write efficient and well-structured programs using the Collection Framework.
